He spoke about five kinds of teachers — angry, sad, comparing, happy, and the most impactful ones, great and strong teachers. He urged us to strive to be the latter — those who inspire, uplift, and lead by example. A true teacher, he said, must get up each day to inspire, sit up late to prepare for a better tomorrow, dress like a model of dignity, give up old methods, and adapt to new and effective ways of teaching. Teachers must build bridges of unity that can never break, be active, innovative, and above all, be like a mother to every child — nurturing with love, patience, and care. His words reminded us that teaching is not just a profession but a mission to shape lives with purpose, strength, and compassion. The session included motivational talks, group activities, and stress-relief exercises like music, games, and dance.
